It is an internet version of radio talk, with additional benefits such as the ability to listen on your own time frame rather than being forced to adapt on certain days and times. Podcasts differ from what you usually hear on the radio, just like the way YouTube videos differ from what you watch on television. The term podcast comes from combining iPods and broadcasts. iPod's ability to save music files (and hedit audio files) lead to their use as an audio broadcast player (podcast) in the early days of the podcast. Podcasts are defined by the ability to subscribe to audio files instead of certain platforms. Podcasts are a series of 'episodes' stored in the same type of audio file that we use to store music on our laptops or smartphones. Similar to that of or talk radio shows, podcasts are generally centered around themes such as politics, sports, entertainment, horror, games, etc. Each 'episode' usually revolts around the subject in the theme. You can listen to individual episodes or you can subscribe to a podcast, which is usually free. For example, Pod Saves America is a news podcast progressively taking political news. It is hosted by four people and shows often include guests who offer their opinions. Episodes tend to centre on something political in nature such as health care or tax reform. At the end of a completely different spectrum are Critical Roles, a podcast hosted by Geek and Sundry featuring voice actors through the Dungeons and Dragons campaigns. Each episode is an adventure in that campaign, with longer adventures broken down into multiple episodes. The number of podcast episodes will vary depending on who produces the show. The obvious difference between podcast radio series talks is the availability at the request of the podcast. However, many popular talk radio shows unleashed a podcast version of the show to reach listeners who missed regular shows. Pod Save America is one of the most popular podcasts online. Wikimedia Commons/Rhododendrites So how else are different podcasts? Well, there are only a lot of bandwidth available for radio broadcasts, so talk shows need to appeal to a wide audience to catch an audience in a certain time. The same restrictions do not apply to podcasts distributed over the internet, so you'll see subjects with more limited appeals and podcasts that don't have the same type of budget. This is one of the biggest benefits of podcasts. If you have an interest, although the importance is very niche, there may be a podcast that covers it. And better, you can listen at home, in cars or anywhere else because podcasts can travel with you in your smartphone. Now we know what podcasts are, how do we find them? There are thousands of free online podcasts available through various hosting services. The service allows you to subscribe to certain podcasts and download them as each new episode is available, even warning you to a new episode if you have an app on your phone. If you own an iPhone or iPad, you already have an app dedicated to podcasts on the device. The Podcast app, which you can easily find using Spotlight Search, will allow you to search for different podcasts, stream certain episodes and subscribe to podcasts. There are also some fantastic Podcast apps available for iPhone and iPad. There are plenty of free podcast applications for Android too. Anywhere can you make a swim first into the podcast pool. One thing we can't tell you is which podcast is right for you. There are thousands of free podcast downloads for almost any interest. Here's a look at the best Podcasts everyone listens to now.
